Interaction Media Interfaces Objects Environments

You are invited to Future Something Project : Final Exhibition; work by young people designing innovative ideas for the future. The exhibition presents interactive prototypes and designs, including talking luggage, shy robotics, secretive games and alternative musical instruments.

Future Something Project (FSP) is an ambitious digital arts project coordinated by Artswork for young people aged 18-25. It brings them together to work with leading interaction technology designers. Their challenge is to work as 4 separate teams to design and promote a "future something". Through this unique relationship, they develop skills in digital art, interactive design, prototyping and marketing, alongside team working and presentation skills.

Future Something Project is coordinated by Artswork, an independent youth arts development agency committed to the development of creative opportunities for young people outside of the formal education sector.

Future Something Project is an action research project funded by NESTA to explore new ways of learning for vulnerable young people through mentoring with digital technology, design and creativity.
